For the sharpest landscapes, you'll want to shoot at f/16 or even f/22. A high f-stop allows the photographer to capture details in both the foreground and the background. Having everything in focus in your landscape shots is important. Point and shoot cameras seldom have the ability to exceed f/8.

Use Photographic Filters. To get the best possible images, you can make use of two filters in your landscape photography. Polarizing filters darken the sky and therefore bring out the blues in contrast to the white of the clouds. Neutral Density (ND) filters prevent too much light from entering the camera.

1. Location, location, location. Landscape photography is as much about planning as it is about the actual process of photography. You should always have a clear idea of where you are planning to go, and at what time of the day you will be able to capture the best photograph.

12 Tips to Help You Capture Stunning Landscape Photos

Most landscape photography relies on wide-angle lenses and a large depth of field to adequately capture the subject. A high aperture, adjusted with the f-stop, allows most of the subject to come into sharp focus. Use the gridlines in your viewfinder or screen to find focus.

On a calm day, it's possible to play with reflections, which can add an entire new dimension to your landscape photography technique. In order to get effective mirror shots with water, look for still water. Then, get low to the ground in order to get an ideal angle (this may even involve getting onto your knees or laying on your stomach).
